

STATEHOOD NOW!

Isn't it time we elect leadership that again lifts the torch of statehood and strives for democracy and budget autonomy for all District residents? Of course it is and I am campaigning with the spirit of the Statehood leaders who can guide us with this worthy endeavor.

STATEHOOD LEADER

+ Julius Hobson: Grew up in Alabama and arrived in Washington in late 40's. In the early 60's he served as president of the Congress of Racial Equality and during this time helped organize demonstrations to win jobs for blacks throughout the city including the first hiring of black bus drivers by DC Transit and the hiring of the first black auto salesmen and dairy employees in the city. He directed campaigns against housing discrimination, helped end segregation in DC hospitals and in 1967 ended teacher segregation, and unfair distribution of books and supplies in DC Public Schools. In 1969 he was elected as a member of the DC Board of Education in the first such election for any public office in the 20th century. It was Hobson's campaign for the 1971 congressional non-voting delegate seat as a Statehood Party candidate that propelled the Statehood Party into broader awareness and created a viable third party in the city. Although he lost the campaign, he went on to be elected to the City Council on the Statehood ticket in 1974.

STATEHOOD NOW!

Isn't it time we elect leadership that again lifts the torch of statehood and strives for democracy and budget autonomy for all District residents? Of course it is and I am campaigning with the spirit of the Statehood leaders who can guide us with this worthy endeavor.

STATEHOOD LEADER

+ Julius Hobson: Grew up in Alabama and arrived in Washington in late 40's. In the early 60's he served as president of the Congress of Racial Equality and during this time helped organize demonstrations to win jobs for blacks throughout the city including the first hiring of black bus drivers by DC Transit and the hiring of the first black auto salesmen and dairy employees in the city. He directed campaigns against housing discrimination, helped end segregation in DC hospitals and in 1967 ended teacher segregation, and unfair distribution of books and supplies in DC Public Schools. In 1969 he was elected as a member of the DC Board of Education in the first such election for any public office in the 20th century. It was Hobson's campaign for the 1971 congressional non-voting delegate seat as a Statehood Party candidate that propelled the Statehood Party into broader awareness and created a viable third party in the city. Although he lost the campaign, he went on to be elected to the City Council on the Statehood ticket in 1974.

STATEHOOD NOW!

Isn't it time we elect leadership that again lifts the torch of statehood and strives for democracy and budget autonomy for all District residents? Of course it is and I am campaigning with the spirit of the Statehood leaders who can guide us with this worthy endeavor.

STATEHOOD LEADERS

+ Josephine Butler: a Statehood movement founder, served as chair of the Statehood Party in 1977 and remained a staunch advocate until her death 20 years later. Born in Brandywine, Maryland, Butler moved to Washington in the 1940s. As a laundry worker she helped to organize laundry employees in the city. After the local Bolling v. Sharpe case ended racially separate schools in Washington in 1954, Butler was instrumental in joining the Adams and Morgan elementary schools into one. Butler was also a major park and environmental advocate who led Washington Parks & People at the time of her death. The Josephine Butler Parks Center, 2437 15th Street, NW, honors her memory.

Also see:

- Julius Hobson – City Council 1974
- Hilda Mason – City Council 1990

www.dcstatehoodgreen.org

STATEHOOD NOW!

Isn't it time we elect leadership that again lifts the torch of statehood and strives for democracy and budget autonomy for all District residents? Of course it is and I am campaigning with the spirit of the Statehood leaders who can guide us with this worthy endeavor.

STATEHOOD LEADERS

+ Josephine Butler: a Statehood movement founder, served as chair of the Statehood Party in 1977 and remained a staunch advocate until her death 20 years later. Born in Brandywine, Maryland, Butler moved to Washington in the 1940s. As a laundry worker she helped to organize laundry employees in the city. After the local Bolling v. Sharpe case ended racially separate schools in Washington in 1954, Butler was instrumental in joining the Adams and Morgan elementary schools into one. Butler was also a major park and environmental advocate who led Washington Parks & People at the time of her death. The Josephine Butler Parks Center, 2437 15th Street, NW, honors her memory.

Also see:

- Julius Hobson – City Council 1974
- Hilda Mason – City Council 1990

www.dcstatehoodgreen.org